COMMENTS

- The homeowners were looking for an alternative to tiles on their patio that would look good, but not be too slippery or hard to keep clean. After seeing and feeling a sampleboard of Ash Granite, they felt the subtle ripple texture provided enough slip resistance and decided to go with the standard Resin Granite system.
- Surface preparation for the previously uncovered concrete involved a diamond grind, extensive patching of long cracks with specialist crack repair material, and finally the application of a primer coat to seal.
- Despite wet weather causing some delays with this exterior application, both owners were delighted with the end result and glad they had followed the word-of-mouth recommendation from their friends.
